LOTI ON BASEBALL

French Author Says in "Century" It Shows a National Trait.

Pierre Loti, the distinguished French author, in his "Impressions of New York" in "The Century," has found much in sprung from all our old races, must in-American metropolitan life to admire, deed have renewed its youth on the soil and, strange as it may seem, coming from of America. And, above all, I like the a self-styled "barbarian from the Orient." way in which these people, who took root baseball is included. "There on a corner here but yesterday, have already shown of Broadway stands a crowd that swells their love of church steeples; whence and buzzes," writes M. Loti. "Traffic is springs necessarily the nobler love of held up; policemen hurry about; it looks as though a riot were in progress. All these people are gazing eagerly at a
